

I do not know how Harris was killed as I had left the Company at the time of his death, but I think it took place at a Dressing Station at Ypres. He had been a Platoon Stretcher bearer for some time also a company runner, either job which requires a responsible man. Harris was one of the best men in my Company, and words cannot express what I would like to say about him, he was always willing to lend a helping hand to a comrade and even when he had just finished one strenuous job would start on another if necessary. I am sure the news of his death was a blow to all his mates. I myself was exceedingly sorry to hear of his death as he had done me a really good turn, and as a runner went through many a hot corner. My sincerest sympathy is with his people.
